WHAT IS TOURISM MANAGEMENT?

Tourism management tailors management to the tourism industry. Graduates of tourism management enter the workforce with an understanding of the organisational management principles that guide tourism operations, as well as a broad understanding of the structural processes affecting tourism today, including commercial, social, and environmental factors. The specialised management training equips graduates with the skills needed in the industry to plan, implement and manage tourism operations effectively.

The Lincoln University degree allows students to complement their study with additional subjects such as marketing, environmental sustainability, or technology, which means that students can tailor-make their skillsets to align with their passions. The accessibility of academic staff and a close connection with industry bodies means that graduates have the theoretical and practical skills needed for work in this thriving and vibrant industry.
TOURISM MANAGEMENT IN NEW ZEALAND AND THE WORLD

Tourism is a sector experiencing growth worldwide. Tourism spending in New Zealand is forecast to grow by 11% from 2015-2021, and over 100,000 New Zealand jobs are directly related to tourism. As visitor destinations open up because of increased information sharing and cheaper travel, there is more competition for the tourist dollar. From independent self-contained travellers to tourists in a fully-scheduled group, the positive experience of visitors to New Zealand depends on qualified professional staff who have the knowledge and skills to drive management, policy, and planning in this diverse and dynamic industry.

Increased demand for sustainable forms of tourism has led to the growth in New Zealand of sustainable, eco- or nature-based tourism. These forms of tourism maintain New Zealand’s position as a key destination for inbound tourists, increasingly from the Asian nations such as China, who seek out the ‘100% pure’ experiences they have seen advertised. Along with this increase in visitor numbers comes concern over the quality of both visitor experiences, and destination. This has increased the demand for staff in management positions to steer and monitor the industry appropriately. The sector is seeking to shift focus from volume to value. Because of this, the outlook is good for strategic management jobs in the tourism industry.

Digital technology is playing an increasing role in the visitor experience. Visitors often manage their own travel and activity planning via mobile devices, and expect internet connectivity at their destination as a matter of course. With increased visitor sophistication comes an increase in demand for experiences which meet high expectations. The industry needs tourism managers who can respond to this shift and innovate with user-friendly and effective digital tools that allow visitors to make the most of their time in and around New Zealand. The ability to attract visitors will depend on tourism managers with in-depth industry knowledge who can anticipate and respond to consumer demand in this rapidly changing information age.

There are a wide variety of roles within the sector. Junior positions in tourism can be the gateway to management roles that students aspire to. Post-graduate study is one option for students who wish to gain an edge in the employment market, with options to specialise in an area of interest related to tourism (e.g., events management, marketing, or policy and planning).

SKILLS AND KNOWLEDGE DEVELOPED BY STUDYING TOURISM MANAGEMENT

Lincoln University students have the option to specialise with either the Bachelor of Tourism Management or can take a more commercial focus by studying the Bachelor of Commerce with a Hotel and Tourism Management major. This is New Zealand’s only university hotel major and is valued by employers for the strong commercial skills it gives students. These include financial, strategic, accounting and human resource skills.

All tourism management graduates need to be able to evaluate and apply operational concepts in their future roles. For this reason all tourism degrees at Lincoln University are designed to equip students with knowledge on managerial aspects such as financial, human and physical resources. Employees in the tourism sector are often required to work increased hours over busy periods. The nature of tourism roles means that flexibility to meet seasonal workloads is valued by employers, as is the ability to assume varied roles within an organisation.

Employers seek well-rounded, engaged graduates with a strong work ethic. As in any sector, employers typically value those who have a professional attitude to their work. This includes good communication (including the ability to communicate to groups, as well as effective interpersonal and written communication), honesty, respect, self-motivation, initiative, time management, and interpersonal skills. The importance of these basic skills cannot be underestimated, even in voluntary roles, as future job opportunities often arise from a good reputation and a varied network of contacts.

The following skills and knowledge are valued in tourism management roles:

- Food and beverage operations
b) Tourism Operations Manager

Tourism Operations Managers oversee much or all of the operational and commercial activities in a tourism business.

- Negotiate rates with suppliers to enable competitive retail pricing
- Increase sales and profitability
- Cater to concerns of clients and staff
- Manage customer relations
- Measure customer satisfaction
- Monitor production key performance indicators (KPI's)
- Perform quality controls
- Delegate tasks
- Prepare and control operational budgets
- Monitor, manage and improve the efficiency of support services such as IT, HR, Accounts and Finance
- Manage selection and relationship of suppliers
- Develop marketable, high quality products
- Create and update accurate trip collateral
- Manage company booking systems
- Recruit and train staff
- Monitor adherence to rules, regulations and procedures
- Improve processes and policies
- Plan and support sales and marketing activities
- Analyse financial data/statements
- Develop or contribute to strategic plans for operational activity

Job tasks are role-specific, so the above is an indication only. For more information on roles, registered Lincoln University students can search Lincoln CareerHub (including expired jobs) for job titles similar to those they are interested in. Job descriptions, including tasks and skills required, are often available.
