

BK Otway Education Foundation Undergraduate Scholarship

Background

Brian Otway (1926 - 2018) was a passionate farmer up until his death aged 91. His father and grandfather were earlier surveyors and pioneer farmers.

Brian Otway grew up and was schooled in Auckland but most weekends and holidays were spent with his brother, Bill, helping out on the family farm in the Waimai / Matira valleys. During World War Two Brian trained as a pilot with the R.N.Z.A.F.

In 1946 he attended Lincoln College to complete a Diploma of Agriculture where he also played for the Lincoln College 1st XV rugby team until 1948. Three of Brian's children also attended Lincoln College studying programmes in agriculture and horticulture.

In the late 1940s Brian purchased a gorse and scrub infested block of land (originally milled for Kauri trees then Kauri gum) in the Te Arai district (Wellsford) with no buildings, fences, or roads. Brian worked extremely hard, contracting off the property by day (land clearing with a bulldozer) and working on his own land by night. Locals called him "mad Otway" as they could see the lights at night time while he was cutting gorse. Once cleared, Brian had milking cows. Soon after he transformed this property and nearby properties into highly productive sheep and cattle farms that also supported large tracts of native bush.

After selling these properties in early 2000 he continued on in his eighties with the help of his youngest son to develop a large rundown farm near Kerikeri. Even in his last years he managed trips to the farm to get onto his beloved bulldozer.

Brian knew the importance of education and believed everyone should have the opportunity to access it. The family saying: standing at the foothills gazing at the sky, how should I get up there if I never try?" is what Brian stood for. Hard work meant results.

In 2009 Brian Otway settled a Charitable Trust known as the BK Otway Education Foundation and on his death a significant part of his estate was left to the trustees of the BK Otway Education Foundation for its purposes.
